

Register of Injuries Books

AMIC produces Register of Injuries Books for your convenience.

Under the relevant legislation for Workplace Injury Management, employers are required to keep a Register of Injuries that is readily accessible in the workplace. The employer at any factory, workshop, office or shop is responsible for this register of injuries.

What is a Register of Injuries?

- The register is a current record of any injuries suffered by workers, whether they result in claims or not.
- Workers who enter particulars of any injury into the register, protect their right to make a claim.
- By prior arrangement, employers can use the register of injuries to notify their insurer of any workplace injuries.

It's important to note that penalties may apply to members for failing to have a register of injuries in your workplace. To order your copy, complete your details below and send/fax the form through to your local office.
